Course Description

This course explores links between the physical environment and social behavior. Students will observe a public social environment and gather data for analysis. The ethics of social research and the observer's interaction with the environment are key points of inquiry. Connections will be made between skills developed in the field and various managerial and strategic outcomes of contemporary workplaces, focusing on the interplay between expectations and actual behavior. Identification of implications for employee motivation, productivity and job satisfaction are examined. Students develop the ability to analyze social groups and their physical surroundings.

Learning Outcomes

After completing this course, you will be able to:

- Systematically observe and analyze social environments to understand human behavior.
- Analyze the shaping force of social environments, such as professional workplaces, on responsive action and demeanor.
- Interpret the function and meaning of deviance for organizational and other social environments.

Learning Strategies and Resources

Some learning activities, assignments and deadlines will vary depending on the delivery format of the course and may differ slightly from what is presented in this document.

The learning process in the course is that for each module, you will: complete your reading assignments in the short novels and answer discussion questions; conduct your field research and complete your analysis for that session, read the academic journal articles and share your observations on the class discuss board.
