Course Description

This course will explore central issues in the history of modern France through the lens of cinematic representations analyzed in historical context. Students will deepen their knowledge of the events and figures in French history and examine change and continuity in such phenomena as the rise of the politically-conscious urban working-class. We will also consider how French society has confronted gender difference and religious pluralism. This course also includes a focus on representations of war and militarism in film, particularly considering the rise of anti-militarist film in the aftermath of the First World War, and the role of violence in colonialism struggles in Algeria and Vietnam. This course will interpret the ways in which films portray historical events and how films contribute to public understanding of history. No prior knowledge of French language is required; all films will be in French with English subtitles.

LSP Historical Inquiry Learning Outcomes

Learning Deliverables

Attendance and participation: Active participation expected: demonstration of paying attention; asking questions; participation in any in-class activities. Cameras on during discussion.

Short papers: Students are responsible for writing 3 short papers over the course of the term, each addressing a question related to readings and film from a module. The aim is to analyze the documents individually, including summarize and analysis of the arguments of the authors, and to draw out the links between the pieces.

Proposal for final paper: Proposal includes the topic, research questions, rationale and annotated bibliography, 4 sources minimum including a film.

Discussion posts & peer response: On D2L, due odd weeks (1, 3, 5, 7, 9). 175-200 words posts plus response to 2 peers required.

Final paper: The major paper required for the course is intended to allow you to explore one issue in greater depth. It is to be based on significant research and analysis of primary and secondary sources. You will build on a topic addressed in the course and include additional sources.
